FMC Executive Editor Kathy Scarbeck said, “Congratulations to everyone who contributed to these outstanding editorial achievements. Even with the many additional challenges raised by the pandemic, our staff and contributors continue to craft outstanding print and digital publications and represent the best that medical journalism has to offer.”

She noted, “We are especially thrilled to have received Honorable Mention awards while working with two valued partners, the American Gastroenterological Association and the National Organization for Rare Disorders, to produce winning entries for GI & Hepatology News and Neurology Reviews, respectively.”

Melissa Sears, Editorial Director of Journals, remarked, “These prestigious awards from FOLIO: highlight the tireless work from our editorial teams to educate our audiences and identify important topics for health care professionals. We are honored to have our journals recognized among so many other reputable media outlets.”

FOLIO: noted, “The Eddies and Ozzies recognize excellence in journalism and design across all sectors of the publishing industry. As one of the broadest and longest-running competitions for editors and designers, winning an Eddie or Ozzie comes with the added honor of being judged exceptional by one’s own peers — this year’s winners were determined by 82 judges, all of whom are experts in journalism or design.

The 2021 winners list features the crème de la crème of content creators and designers—a pool of over 1400 entries. Congratulations to all the winning editors, journalists, designers, publishing and creative professionals!”

Content development, quality, and relevancy is of utmost importance at Frontline, with an emphasis on digital first. The many people who contribute to the editorial creation, digital and print design, multimedia innovation, and marketing research – working with authors, opinion leaders, and advisory boards – continually show professionalism and expertise as they strive to produce a depth and breadth of content that meets the evolving needs of our omnichannel readers. FMC is honored to have been recognized by FOLIO: magazine.
