

Randy Danielsen, PhD, PA-C, DFAAPA, Clinician Reviews®
PA Editor-in-Chief, Receives Prestigious Stead Award

Parsippany, NJ – June 18, 2015 – Randy D. Danielsen, PhD, PA-C, DFAAPA, received the 2015 Eugene A. Stead Jr. Award of Achievement during the American Academy of Physician Assistants annual conference in San Francisco (held May 23-27). This is the highest award given by the AAPA.

The Stead Award honors the recipient's lifetime achievement that has had a broad and significant impact on the PA profession. Dr. Danielsen, according to AAPA, is being recognized for distinguishing himself as a pioneering national and state PA leader, clinician, educator, author, and editor of scholarly journals. Among the latter is his role as PA Editor-in-Chief of Clinician Reviews, a position he has held since 2007, after many years' service as a board member. Throughout his career, he has continued to advance and enhance the profession for the betterment of PAs and the patients they serve.

"Randy's contributions to Clinician Reviews are integral to our success in fulfilling our readers' needs for high-quality clinical content," states Karen J. Clemments, Editor. "We couldn't do it without him."

"I am so honored to be mentioned in the same breath as the previous award winners, and I was fortunate to know Dr. Eugene A. Stead Jr., the founder of the PA profession," said Dr. Danielsen (pictured on the right). "I was privileged to begin my career when the profession was young and have had so many great opportunities in clinical practice, PA education, workforce research, and professional leadership. I hope I have been part of the maturation process of this important and much-needed profession."

Dr. Danielsen is Dean of the Arizona School of Health Sciences at A. T. Still University in Mesa. Prior to that, he served as a clinical professor in a variety of academic settings. Dr. Danielsen started his career as Medical Corpsman in the US Air Force and retired with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the National Guard.
